

Silent mover: the Solar Shuttle on the Serpentine has a roof made from 27 glass panels that collect energy from the sun and use it to power the boat

Breast milk fails to lower obesity risk

Research from the University of Cambridge has found that breastfeeding does not reduce the risk of obesity in children. The study, which followed 10,000 children from birth to age 10, found that the risk of obesity was similar for children who were breastfed and those who were not. The researchers suggest that other factors, such as genetics and diet, may play a more significant role in determining a child's weight.

Serpentine's Solar Shuttle wins award for innovation

KATHARINE BARNEY

THE environmentally friendly Solar Shuttle boat in Hyde Park has won a national award for innovation and design.

The boat, designed by Christoph Behling, glides silently around the Serpentine powered purely by energy from the sun.

It won the sustainable design category in the annual Condé Nast Traveller magazine awards, announced last night.

The boat, which was launched last summer, has a roof comprising 27 curved glass solar panels. These collect energy which is stored in batteries, allowing the vessel to travel up to 20 miles before it needs a top-up.

There were several other "green" award-winners. Silverjet, the world's first carbon-neutral airline, won the aviation category. The company includes a "carbon offset" charge in the price of every business class ticket it sells.

The soon-to-be launched Honda FCX, a car that runs on hydrogen extracted from the domestic gas supply, came top in the transport category.

Other winners included Tom Dixon for the best design in retail for the interior of Habitat's new store in a listed building in Regent Street. Samsonite's Black Label range, designed by Alexander McQueen, won the style on the move category, while Bose QuietComfort 3 headphones won the communication technology award.

Alan Yau's Yauatcha, the dim sum restaurant in Soho, won the gourmet category. Offering 150 varieties of tea, it was opened two years ago by the team behind Hakkasan.

The shortlist for each category was selected by experts. The magazine's readers then chose the winners online.

Sarah Miller, the magazine's editor, said: "We wanted to celebrate the very best that the design world offers to travellers everywhere. The Solar Shuttle exemplifies perfectly how a travel and visitor experience can be best enhanced."
